OSF'S SOLUTION

Deployed an innovative process to solve industry-specific needs & support Stockday's requirements for a simplified, effortless workflow

Designed the complex Mechanism for the Promotion Engine with automation, positioning Stockday to meet their customer needs:

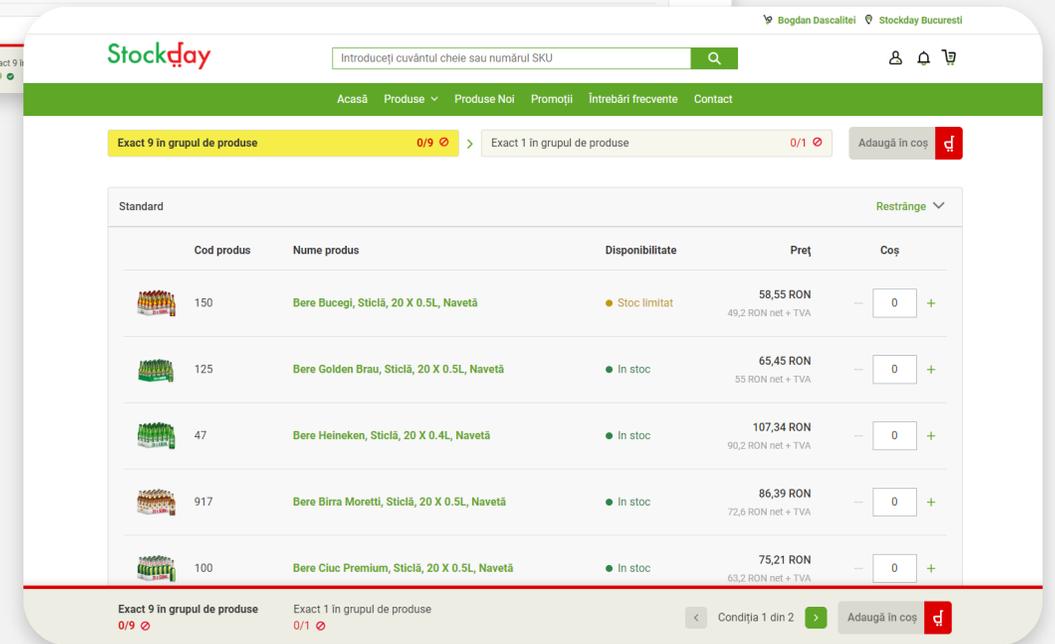

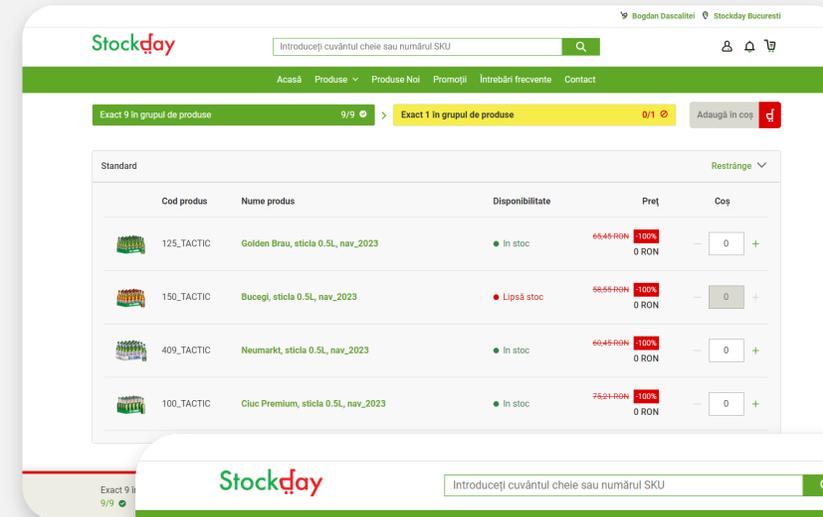

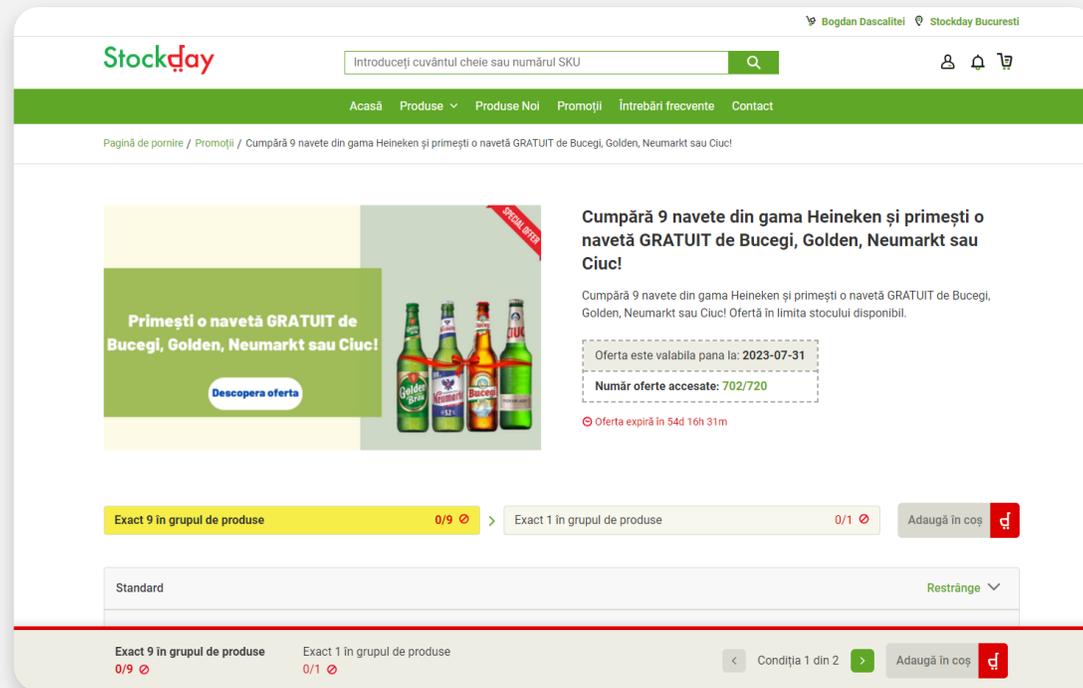

- ✓ Single and bulk ordering
- ✓ Promotion set-up with multiple parameters (e.g. minimum, maximum, exact quantity, value)
- ✓ Immediate transparency on stock for customers
- ✓ Stackable promotions.

OSF'S SOLUTION

The promotions component created for Stockday offers users the possibility to buy single products as a qualifier and target (e.g., buy 2 boxes and get 1 free).

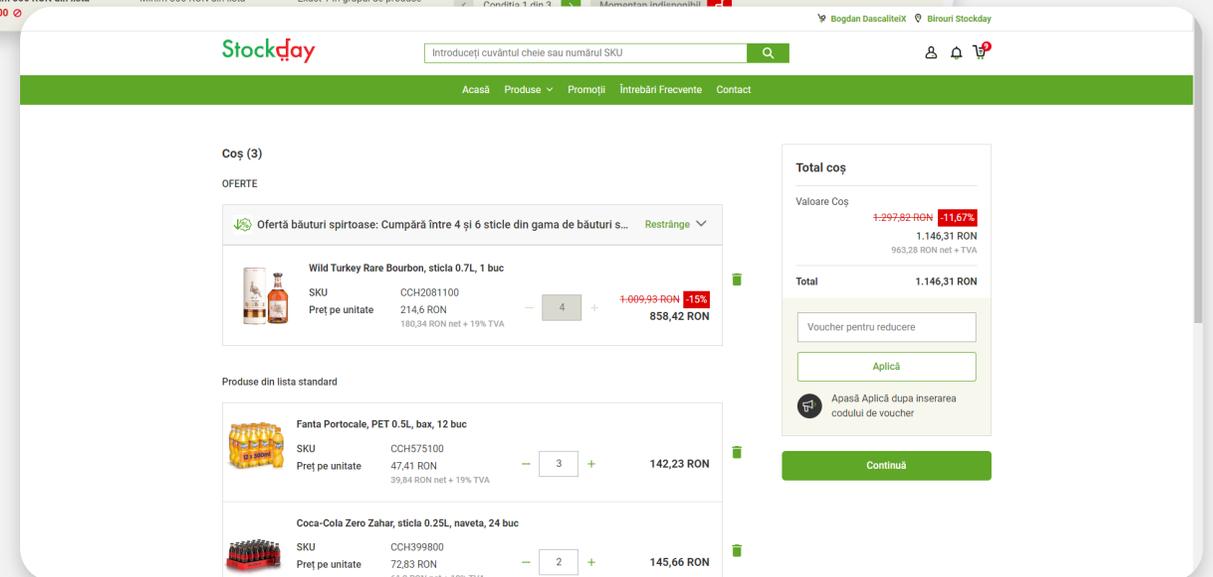

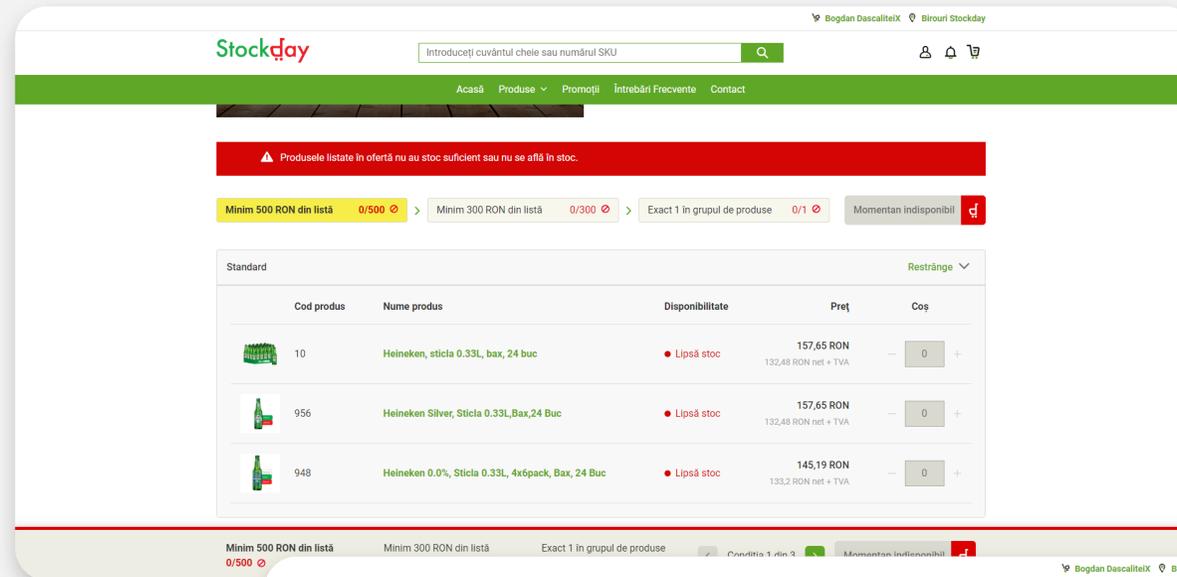

The products already have a pre-set quantity, and when the customer clicks Add to cart, the promotion is added.

OSF'S SOLUTION

With the Mechanism for the Promotion Engine, there is the possibility to buy multiple products as qualifiers and targets (e.g., choose 5 products from the list of products and get 1 or more discounted or free from the list of products).

Customers can select the promotional products they want to benefit from. Some promotions may refer to value instead of quantity (e.g., buy 500 RON and get 1 product with a discount or free). In such cases, when the customer adjusts the quantity of a product, the value is added to the bar until it reaches the promotion value.

OSF'S SOLUTION

Promotions can be added several times separately to the cart, but if there is a quantity limit per region or user, the promotion can no longer be added to the cart when that usage limit is reached.

If the stock has run out on certain products, the customer can easily see that the product is not in stock, and the quantity cannot be adjusted.

If a promotion cannot be purchased because there is no stock for the target or qualifier, then the user is notified by a message that the offer is not available. There is also a validation for weight limit, with the customer being notified by a feedback message if the limit for shipping for that region is reached.
